There are various greases which meet the specifications and a listing would be very extensive.

We are not recommending any one particular grease over another. However, the following may serve as a guide to your respective distributor of lubricants.

A good portion of the above greases are lithium soap materials, and while lithium soap is slightly more expensive than soda soap greases, we are advised that these lithium greases have been in recent years coming down in their prices, so that they are quite comparable with most of the older soda soap greases. Either one of these soaps are satisfactory, assuming that they meet the specifications set forth; however, it is not good practice to mix them when repacking the wheel bearings.
